Historical Note:

In 1979 Kay Bonetti, a University of Missouri-Columbia graduate student, formulated the idea of the American Audio Prose Library (AAPL) along with Speer Morgan, author of Belle Starr and a UMC English professor, because of a need for enduring audio recordings of modern writers. Before AAPL it seems that very few recordings of modern prose writers existed. Equipped with grants from the Missouri Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts, AAPL was officially able to begin operation in 1981 under the guidance of Bonetti.

AAPL was the first comprehensive audio library of its kind to establish a permanent record of working writers' lives. By broadcasting prose programs to over 100 public radio stations nationwide, AAPL maintained a following of listeners. Moreover, in 1984 AAPL was awarded an Ohio State Achievement of Merit Award from Ohio State University.

Nearly all the interviews in this collection were done by Bonetti. Her personal style of questioning allows the writers to talk about their ways of writing and influences on their writing. Moreover, Bonetti, versed in each author's work through careful reading and research, is able to ask thorough questions concerning their life, work, and ability to write for a living. She allows each interview to form a life of its own, even though she asks each writer some of the same questions.

Arrangement:

The audio cassettes are arranged in accession order (the order in which material was received) and then alphabetically by the author's name. The audio tapes are arranged similarly to the audio cassettes.

Scope and Content Note:

The American Audio Prose Library consists solely of recordings on audio cassettes and audio tapes. There are no paper records such as correspondence, grant proposals, or account sheets. The labels on the audio cassettes have the author's name and some have the recording date, type of recording, and information about whether the tape is edited or not. There is no a.t. 62.
