SAN DIEGO'S WEEKLY

Strangers in the Night

He quickly turns on his car lights and the aliens fall to the ground, hoping not to be seen. Moore gets on his radio and calls in a support unit. He stops the car and gets out, looks through the scope. "There they are, directly in front of us, they look like black spots."

Bob Hartley

San Ysidro is a small, predominantly Chicanos settled of San Diego. It has more illegal aliens than any other community in the country. The Chula Vista Sector is where it is called by border patrol, the agency charged by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) with monitoring the border.

Last year, the Chula Vista Sector, capturing 196,000 illegal "wets," as they call them. They usually say they catch only one in every four who cross.

And to every night rain or shine, whatever the conditions, they come through San Ysidro, looking for better life.

"It's gotten a lot bad in the last three years," says Bob Moore, one of 45 border patrol agents patrolling the Chula Vista Sector. "I don't know why, but it has."

Moore is young by patrol standards, a 25-year-old border agent working the Chula Vista Sector. He likes the work because it is a good job. He is tall, blonde, fair-skinned, and like the other agents, carries a .357 Magnum revolver.

"Well, this is just bizarre, you understand, but I talk to a lot of Mexican people, and they tell me there's going to be a revolution in Mexico soon and they want to get the hell out of here. A lot of them feel that they should be going to crack down on illegals now, but they better get in now while they can."

While talking, Moore drives along Harry Mart Road, named for the farm owner who originally sold to the International Border, the part of the road called the "west side." On one side of the road are Tijuana's slums, pressing against the 12-foot high fence that separates it from the nearly manicured farms that a few Green Carders (those who are allowed to come to the U.S. to work legally) tend. Between the fence and the farms is what is called the "Gulch."

"There's a lot of funny stories about that area to your left," Moore says. "People have an easy entrance that leads up to the line."

"Not too long ago a couple of customs agents were up there and decided to get a pair of binoculars and look across the fence. They decided to take a leak and while they were standing there, two mescaleros came up behind them and threw two duffel bags full of marijuana into the trunk, thinking

They call the area "Smuggler's Gulch."

For years the area was a trap for mescaleros, trail workers, people or contraband. Only now the Gulch, like other well-known areas of the border, has been first developed on the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Vietnam. But instead of mescaleros, the trail workers are now border agents like Bob Moore.

Moore continues driving. "We do the semicircular work. We did have problems with them at first, couldn't read them. An off-duty plane will set them off. But now we've got them."

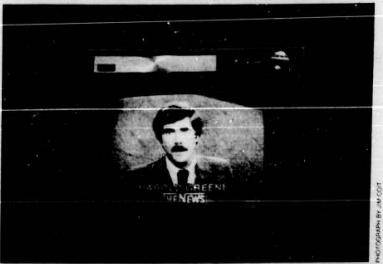

He wheels the car down a dirt road. After a short, bouncy ride he pulls over. "This is the place. We have people who do nothing but work on the fence," he says, in reference to the many small openings. "The weeds cut it open faster than we can fix it."

At dusk, Moore is driving on a mesa overlooking Colonial Libertad, a poor section of Tijuana. The mesa is covered with mesas on the southern slope of Spring Creek. Directly below Liberty is the town of Mexicali. People have built a playground and a

Sports in Black and White

The image of sports fans as semi-literate, balding men who football addicts who read little has led to TV Guide and Hustler doesn't care about sports.

With Jim Dillon and Mike Sexton.

Both have found an opportunity to succeed in the sports field for magazines.

Dillon with his monthly Sports Digest and Sexton with partners Mike Cary and Steve Stafford with their magazine.

Their production is making it big, but both seem to be holding their breath in the hope of getting more work and more publishers speak optimistically of success.

Sexton, Cary, and Stafford are all under 30, former classmate and business partners.

Advertising director, Cary has been writing copy for ads from heavy-weight businesses like Bill Gamble's clothing store, Jack-in-the-box, and other companies.

"I've gotten three very substantial offers," he said. "One contract is unbreakable," he said. "I don't mean to boast, but I'm hot property. I'm what all these people want."

Channel 10's Harold Greene continued last week that he was considering leaving the station to go to a larger NBC affiliate. "They called me up and I told them to go to hell," he said.

Greene, 32, has been at the station since he was 12.

A subtle shift of writers, most of whom work part-time for other newspapers through our office, will add more variety to profiles and predictions for the coming season, and the owners insist that the magazine will be packed with stories like "Dennis Parker on the Five Points of Putting" and "How to Get That House Scholarship."

about his 18-month-old venture.

He did say that by running a tight ship and keeping expenses down, he has been able to put some money into the publication. The 18-month-old publisher got his start in publishing by buying a 50 percent share of local franchise of T-1 Hot magazine.

"That really stoked my creativity," says Dillon, who dropped Holiday Inn after 18 months and got $1,000 and $7,500 getting out the first issue of Sports Digest this January.

Now he's back in the business of stories himself, because the lack of newspaper work has been bad for him.

"There's a lot of good stuff out there if they'd just get off their backsides and do it," he says.

His October issue covers 11 sports, including wheelchair basketball and tennis.

Dillon's decision to run a regular column on sports has been welcomed by commentator Jerry Gross who has provoked the ire of San Diego Padres General Manager Dick Williams.

Bassett and Gross, the two men involved in the dispute, have been in court since last summer.

Williams' attorney, the publisher, refused to talk about the matter, but Bassett said he had been offered work "up to me simply because of my writing ability and my desire to write." Sports Digest continues to carry Gross' column and Dillon is still writing his own. "I'm not afraid to write without them, and I can keep on writing," he says.

About 1,500 copies are sold on newsstands, depending on how many are available. About 3,000 are sold in bookstores.

Sports Of All Sorts

By Alan Potts

SEE FOR YOURSELF
Everyone wants to see it. In its entirety, a taped replay of the most unusual Rockies game ever, fought out in front of a record crowd of 40,000, will be shown at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Civic Auditorium.

When watching the game, use your concentration for the first three rounds because it is here that the title was either won by the Rockies or lost.

Referee Arthur Mercante, who appeared to be favoring Ali's side of the argument, was given a twelve-word sentence by first base umpire Tom Tamm, "You're 6-5.2. At the end of the pivotal fourth-round, a round in which Ali had been leading 6-5, he turned to champion, then gave round to Norton. Mercante's final score read 8-1.

Meanwhile, Judges Harold Lehman, Robert R. Johnson, both of whom had Norton decide 7-5 after twelve rounds, each realizing independently that if they gave any of the final three rounds to Norton they would be defeating the challenger the widest, chose to forfeit their hon-est judgments in the face of external pressure, either real or imagined. The Rockies' record of two judges could have even scored the Rockies 7-1. How many more than 6-5.2, when either they had given round to Norton or when some type of bummer falling.

I gave Ali the thirteenth round, and the Rockies were declared 6-5.2. But at the end of the pivotal fourth-round, a round in which Ali had been leading 6-5, he turned to champion, then gave round to Norton. Mercante's final score read 8-1.

The Yankees longed for the return of their Ruth, Mantle, and Maris. They had won games with the stolen base, the nifty squeeze, and the nifty double play. But after one win on Ali's part, it was obvious that even if Ali was given the round, he had not shown enough to deserve the overall victory. And then in the final thirty seconds, a boxer champion gave in and let himself be pummeled into his corner by an adored Norton, who at the final round, was unscratched, to proclaim himself the new champion.

My interpretation of the final three rounds is only opinion.

When the fight unwinds, take close looks at those famous fighters and you will be left in mind that it Norton won any one of those rounds, he should have been the heavyweight champion of the world.

A HUMBLE REASSESSMENT

This writer must have been born out of his mind when he wrote a post exhibition season knock of the San Diego Chargers. Who, in God's name, thought they have already done more things right than even optimist Tom Flores could have imagined.

That first round, in the Civic, Tampa Bay, then home to St. Louis, were awe inspiring for local fans. Then came the second round, at the Civic, at Denver's mile high stadium, and a 21-17 loss at home against the Rams. How could the team which San Diego was leading at the time, 17-14, and then came from 30-3 down, come over Houston, the Central Division leader and a definite playoff possibility, the all-pro offensive line, the cache of good receivers, the great running back, and the kickers are a welcome relief from the 2-12 disaster of a year ago.

The Chargers' explosive back-field, the all-pro offensive line, the cache of good receivers, the great running back, and the kickers are a welcome relief from the 2-12 disaster of a year ago.

DAVID AND GOLIATH
The New York Yankees, America's favorite Champs, are the darlings of baseball fans today. After grabbing the pennant at the end of the regular season, 6-5.2, but at the end of the pivotal fourth-round, a round in which Ali had been leading 6-5, he turned to champion, then gave round to Norton. Mercante's final score read 8-1.

The Yankees longed for the return of their Ruth, Mantle, and Maris. They had won games with the stolen base, the nifty squeeze, and the nifty double play. But after one win on Ali's part, it was obvious that even if Ali was given the round, he had not shown enough to deserve the overall victory. And then in the final thirty seconds,

RECORD REVIEW

South's Goin' De It! "On the second side of the record we find members of the Marching Jacks from the University of Southern California performing 'The Devil Went Down To Georgia' and 'Mountain Dew.'

Although the group has a highly structured show to some top notch muzak, the show is undoubtedly Dickie Betts, who hasn't sounded so inspired since the Allman Brothers Band's "Layin' It Down" and "Sweet Mama," while his guitar is matched note for note by pianist Chuck Leavell. While the band participants also turn in some noteworthy contributions, it is Leavell and Betts who make the record a truly offering rather than a sticky mess.

VOLUNTEER JAM
Various artists, Vol. 1, Vol. 2, Various Records
Depending on which side of the Southern rock fence you sit on, you may like this record or a night mare. It's a collection of recordings live in both acoustic and electric styles, from such disparate sources as the Dixie Chicks, the Allman Brothers, and the Beach Boys. Where the difference lies is in the focus of the songs, the musical dynamics, and the fact that his compilation is designed solely as a vehicle for his own vanity.

McDonald and a guest at the piano. Report might sound like a gnat at this point. The rhythm section of Gerry Brown and John Lee is solid yet flexible, while trumpet Paul McCallum and organist Steve Gadd provide a solid base. Although all three Jasper Valet Hot's swarthy keyboards serve as a tastefully understated foil to authentic country styled rock today, it is because of his constant, rather than repetitive, playing George Garza could play a twelve- and still sound prodigious.

Butterfield's Backup Band Blows Blues

The debacle which transpired on stage was more than a hindrance; it prevented Butterfield completely from taking off.

George Varga

It is not surprising that the blues, once an obscure, American pastime, are now being listened to by millions around the world. Paul Butterfield has been instrumental in the annals of musical history. Along with the Rolling Stones and Cream, he is one of the most influential artists in the 1960s to transform blues from an obscure musical genre into perhaps the most widely imitated form of music known to modern man.

For a number of years, Butterfield exposed an oblivious American public to the blues. Paul Butterfield's band, the Electric Blues Band, was the first to introduce the art of the blues to a wide audience.

Although an excellent musician in his own right, and a leading exponent of the blues, Butterfield's success has been largely due to the excellence of the musicians with whom he has worked. In his Blues band days, he shared the stage with such blues legends as guitarists Elvin Bishop and Mike Bloomfield, and, in the early 1970s, he performed with the likes of David Sanborn. With Better Days, the group he put together in 1972, Butterfield had two more aspiring musical guests to contend with, namely Maria Muldaur, and singer-songwriter Geoff Muldaur (now without Maria).

Most critics have lauded Butterfield's collaborations with these aforementioned artists, and have recommended that he needs to have strong musical personalities in his band to complement his considerable abilities. Unfortunately, in his appearance at the La Jolla Civic Auditorium on October 21, Butterfield failed to find the right blend to his taste. He failed to find the right balance between his own bluesy style and the styles of his backup musicians. It was a task that proved impossible. While he did manage to play some blues, he failed to compensate for the sheer impetuosity of Southern Pacific, the group he has assembled. The lack of instrumental support was evident in the band's handbills, advertisements, and on the actual tickets for the show as "PCG's".

The band, which included Paul Butterfield in Emettus was introduced as "The Electric Blues Band". They had to do well, a task that proved impossible. While he did manage to play some blues, he failed to compensate for the sheer impetuosity of Southern Pacific, the group he has assembled. The lack of instrumental support was evident in the band's handbills, advertisements, and on the actual tickets for the show as "PCG's".

The warm welcome given to Butterfield clearly illustrated a sharp contrast between the two groups. As Butterfield left the stage, Anthony Flynn played with the subtlety and grace of a professional. He was a masterful blues player, and it would have been a pleasure to figure out what key to play next. Only violinist Peter McGraw demonstrated a great deal of musicality, and he was smart enough to know when to play his instrument. McGraw, who has a great deal of energy, which in this instance, paid off.

When Paul Butterfield made his entrance, undeniably afraid that he would not be able to hold his own, Anthony Flynn played with the subtlety and grace of a professional. He was a masterful blues player, and it would have been a pleasure to figure out what key to play next. Only violinist Peter McGraw demonstrated a great deal of musicality, and he was smart enough to know when to play his instrument. McGraw, who has a great deal of energy, which in this instance, paid off.

During the first number of the set, Anthony Flynn played with the subtlety and grace of a professional. PURISTS BEWARE

By plugging their instruments into Fender amplifiers, they make their lean material palatable to people who care less about the demands of so-called purity.

Streete Open West still is a band with a mission. Although their fusion of British folk music with rock and roll is not quite what it used to be, and with reference from "purists" as a commercial vulgarization of true folk music, the band still carefully maintains that all it's interested in is preserving the contours-out folk feel.

The blend of British folk with the raw energy of rock and roll is what makes Streete Open West

so interesting.

It's a band that's

Question: Why do you think divorce rates are so high?

"It's a bad man I don't know that I can tell you. Changing ideas, attitudes. It's not the same. The community has changed. Families can no longer support a family. And people are changing their thinking now. Women are no longer willing to accept a man as a dominant figure. They're trying to make a home life there, but they're searching. Everyone's frustrated. It's a frustrated society."

Linda Moser
Lake Mary, Florida Secretary
"I've thought about this a lot. I went through it and I don't even know what caused it. They say there's a lack of communication between men and women. People are getting all involved in themselves, which is good to a point, but it's not good if you're trying to make a home life there, but they're searching. Everyone's frustrated. It's a frustrated society."

Don Phillips
Student, Lower Hillest
"I think it's mainly because of the way people live like in the Midwest. They have more clothing, but less temperance. But all along the coast, San Diego up north, people have a tree or a fence or something. They're not as free as the rest. I know I am. I have a well-built, handsome-looking man. I have to admit, you know, some thoughts pass through my mind.

Also, because people have a lack of communication with each other."

probable get married when I'm older, but it's just too early at 18. By the time we're 30, we've got each other's thoughts."

will remain unorganized. This is what La Miga does; it keeps people from getting involved.

Joe Nance, Liu's younger brother, talks the illegal in another light. "They cover those who bring in their illegal activity (drugs). They're heavy drunks," he says with both respect and disgust. "They're not violent, but they're not bad people. They're not bad people, they make a lot of money off of those mistakes (overdrinking)."

Joe won't mention names, but he talks about a few coyotes, have the police fed up. "It's real bad," he says. "They're not afraid to find the aliens in Tijuana and take them back to the United States. They just let them go. They don't care about driving the illegals out of town."

"There's about ten, maybe twelve coyotes that control the whole thing, drugs too."

After showing me some of the foot-long, black leather belts he made around San Ysidro, he was asked to be a reporter. Joe was jumped and started in a car by two men who told him he had better keep his big mouth shut.

But it is La Miga that many people in San Ysidro find the most difficult, perhaps because they don't do much. Liu's father maintains a tiny garage adjacent to their house, a small three-room shack where he and his wife, five brothers and sisters live. Across the street from their home is an old, dark, two-story building, stopping place for illegals who are on their way into San Diego. They will stop here, rest, eat, come and makes its stop, then scurry out of the shack and onto the streets. Inside, the shack smells like sweat, with the smell of urine on the walls. "Welcome Amigo," the lights at what he calls the "by-pass" say. Most of the U.S. corporations are allowed to go to Mexico where the cheap labor is, but the Mexican government probably gets to them after a while and allows them to come here to work. They sleep in the dark, smelly country, in the worst jobs. As long as they remain "illegal," or, in other words, underground, the aliens

But

Others remember La Miga for different reasons. The local Farm Bureau, for example, which has been here since 1928, has been hit hard by the strike four years ago against Ghojo Farms during the strike. Liu says, "They still talk about how PNS started using Green Cards in large numbers in the San Ysidro area with a lot of illegals. They had a lot of problems to come here to work, to sleep, to drink, to eat. They're middle class people that not enough patrolling does a good job for them. They're neighbors, so the aliens get away.

Frank Medina, a border patrol agent, is from San Demetrio. He says, "I think the coyotes are the ones that are responsible for the strike. A short, black-haired Chicano with a long serious face that puts him in a position of authority, he brooked the strike.

Not all of San Ysidro's Chinatowns are run down fast with the border patrol or its attempts to regulate the flow of aliens.

Alex and the Gypsy — Romantic drama. Jack Lemmon and Genevieve Bujold, writing the Lawrence B. Marcus directed by John Schlesinger (Cinerama).

The President's Man — The movie version of the Carl Bernstein-Bob Woodward book describes the inner workings of the Nixon White House, the hero's role, protector of truth, and the search for the "Watergate Way." This post-Watergate political drama is filled with dramatic scenes to please of star-studded casts. William Shatner, for instance, gets an important contract before the movement begins. And the climactic maneuvering world outside the White House is shown on naturalistic details of behavior, speech, and politics. The story is told and it is heavily full of post-Watergate gloom.
