Historical Note:

Robert N. Denham was born on October 23, 1885 in St. Louis to Robert Newton and Sarah Compton Denham. He was educated in Missouri and Michigan, admitted to the bar in those states and Texas. During World War I, he served as a second lieutenant in the Air Corps. Married three times, he had four children. He served as attorney for banking, brokerage, and corporate interests in New York and Florida and on the Pacific Coast. As trial examiner (1928-1947) and general counsel (1947-1950) for the National Labor Relations Board, his conservative views had considerable influence on labor-management relations and interpretations of the Taft-Hartley Act. Fired by President Truman in 1950, he resumed his private practice, was a lobbyist for the Continental Baking Company, and served as advisor to the President's Conference on Administrative Procedure. He lived in Chevy Chase, Maryland, until his death in St. Louis on June 18, 1954.

Arrangement:

The collection has been arranged into the following six series:

Private Practice
National Labor Relations Board
Legislation
Speeches
Post General Counsel Years
Personal Papers.

Scope and Content Note:

The strengths of this collection are the insights into the history of labor-management relations, the inner workings of large corporations and banking interests, business cycles and ethics, and commercial and labor law of the 1920s through the 1940s. Florida land development and reclamation in the 1930s is another highlight. There is little in the way of personal information. Denham's papers as trial examiner and general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board comprise over eighty percent of the collection. More complete series descriptions can be found in the folder list.
